Dear Dan:

Not wishing to appear like a thief in the night, I'm returning the Ball manuscript and essay which you were nice enough to show me in your office, and which I absent-mindedly took to lunch and then to Connecticut. In way of atonement I thought I would mention an essay I meant to remind you of, if you haven't read it. It recently came to mind because of the letters it provoked in reply. The article is Ronald Schaffer's "American Military Ethics in World War II: The Bombing ^xOf German Civilians," in the Sept. 1980 Journal of American History. The letters in reply are in the June 1981 issue of the Journal. If you don't already have it, I think you'd find it interesting re. what we talked about last.

Incidentally, I'm currently commuting between Litchfield, Connecticut and New Haven until I find a place to rent somewhere in the countryside around here. Until then, I'm reachable either at my office at Yale (203) 436-0777, or at my friend's place in Litchfield, 567-0625. Please let me know when you'll be out here so we can get together.

Best wishes,

-Greg
